Amplifying All Voices in LTSS Systems Transformation: California State of the State

For California's older adults, people with disabilities and family caregivers, the past year brought significant challenges, including equity issues magnified by the fallout of the COVID-19 pandemic. The release of the Master Plan for Aging demonstrates a commitment to addressing system issues and related inequities, with transformation on the precipice through new opportunities such as the California Advancing and Innovating Medi-Cal (CalAIM) initiative. In this session, attendees will learn about the most pressing issues facing our long-term services and supports (LTSS) system, with related legislative, budgetary, and programmatic updates. Attendees will hear from and engage with California's leading experts and policy leaders to better understand California's policy landscape through an equity lens and consider where they can play a role. Assemblymember Adrin Nazarian, Chair of the California Assembly Committee on Aging and Long-Term Care, will provide a keynote address.

From Theory to Practice: Delivering Care for People with Complex Needs

Supporting older adults and people with disabilities who have complex needs presents challenges and opportunities. Services have become more integrated and focused on a person's goals. This makes it essential to enlist providers who can deliver team-based and person-centered care. The National Center for Complex Health & Social Needs created a set of core competencies for the health care and social service sectors. This session will provide an overview of the competencies, discuss ways to activate these competencies in practice, and offer an opportunity to hear from those using the competencies. Attendees will also hear from a person whose lived experience and encounters with the delivery system helped inform and shape the final core competencies.

Transforming Medicare and Medicaid Beyond COVID-19 for a Person-Centered Future

While the COVID-19 pandemic exposed problems in meeting the medical and long-term care needs of older adults, the federal government allowed states and local-level providers substantial flexibilities in how care could be organized, delivered, and paid for through Medicare and Medicaid. This response during a public health emergency showed new ways to deliver person-centered care to aging Americans and those living with complex care needs beyond what was previously imagined. In this session, attendees will learn about the Medicare and Medicaid flexibilities and hear from local providers who used them to better serve these populations and their family caregivers. Attendees will also consider what policy actions should become permanent to achieve person-centered care for the future. Also, Senator Bob Casey, Chair of the Senate Special Committee on Aging, will provide a keynote address.

A Future Vision for Aging Well and Equitably Beyond COVID: Reflections from Public Health, Media, and Technology Leaders

By 2034, the United States will be – for the first time ever – a country with a greater number of older adults than children and increasing racial and ethnic diversity across the population. How do we reimagine and build an equitable society where all populations can age well, particularly in light of reshaped perspectives from the COVID-19 crisis? This discussion will include experts to challenge core assumptions and share possible futures from the perspectives of public health, media, and technology. Also in our final Forum week, we will announce and learn about our 2021 Innovation Award recipient. At the end of the session, Poet Laureate Brian Sonia-Wallace will recite a poem inspired by the presentations.
